High Availability

Every Clear Connect Cloud Server resides on a host in a VMware High Availability cluster, alongside numerous alternate hosts. Agents within each host communicate with and monitor the functionality of the other hosts.

If a host cannot be reached for more than 15 seconds, it is considered failed, at which point the virtual machine running that host is restarted on an alternate host. So in the rare instance that a Clear Connect Cloud Server fails, it's failed over to another host within seconds, meaning that downtime to your business is negligible or even unnoticeable.

Some physical servers, on the other hand, take half an hour or more to reboot after failure, if they reboot at all (they may not if there's a hardware or patch failure). How long can you afford to be disconnected from your servers?
